Tony Gioventu ~ Executive Director Bio

Tony is the Executive Director of the Condominium Home Owners' Association of B.C. (CHOA), a consumer association in British Columbia with over 200,000 members comprising strata corporations, owners, and business members who serve the strata industry. Tony is the weekly columnist for The Province, The Times Colonist, and "24". Since 2002 Tony has written over 1,000 columns and information bulletins dedicated to condo living and is the co-author of "A Practical Guide to Bylaws: the Strata Property Act, and "Understanding Governance: Strata Rules of order and procedures in British Columbia." Tony has served as a director/committee member for the Homeowner Protection Office of BC Housing Province of BC, BC Building Envelope Council, Canadian Standards Association, The Real Estate Council of BC, a faculty member for Continuing Legal Education (CLEBC), Review Editor for Sauder School of Business UBC and recently appointed commissioner for the Independent Advisory Committee for the Real Estate Council of BC. With offices in New Westminster, Victoria and Kelowna CHOA provides service to its members throughout the province, promoting an understanding of strata living, and the interests of strata property owners. On average the association fields 300 inquiries a day from owners, strata council members, managers and agents, and delivers over 100 seminars annually on a variety of strata related topics including governance, operations and administration.
